A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR MORRILL.

It was a particularly fitting tribute that Senator Balford Proctor paid today, in his speech of acceptance before the General Assembly, to the lamented Justin S. Morrill who for so many years served the state of Vermont in the upper branch of the United States Congress. That the words should come from the senior Senator of the state, himself nearing the time when he will be called from active duties in behalf of his native state, is all the more fitting. Senator Proctor voiced the feeling of every Vermonter when he declared that although several years have passed since Senator Morrill's decease "the memory of that grand man will ever be freshly cherished by the people of the state and nation he loved and served so well." It is true that the memory of this noble man is enshrined in the hearts of all the people of this commonwealth. There have been greater men perhaps, in respect to prominence in national councils, to represent the state of Vermont, but there has been none of so kindly and lovable a nature. And yet he was a power in behalf of the state and nation. Keen, discerning and quick to perceive the needs as they confronted the state and nation, he was as active in behalf of each. No more shining example could be held before the gaze of present and future representatives of the state of Vermont than this "grand old man," the late Senator Morrill. If they measure up to his standard there can be nothing more asked of them by the people whom they represent.

A prospective law which is of much interest in Barre is that presented in the legislature by the representative from Hyde Park, Mr. Waite, relating to regulating arrest of intoxicated persons. It provides that such persons may be arrested without a warrant and be held until such time as they are in a condition to appear in court. Some time ago the police force of Barre was informed that it must not arrest persons for intoxication unless warrants had first been procured against them. Now, this was manifestly a ridiculous state of affairs. It was required that policemen on seeing persons apparently intoxicated should rush to the nearest grand juror and have a warrant sworn out against "John Doe" or "Fred Roe" or some other fictitious personage, then rush back and serve the warrant—if the object of their search was to be seen. More often the individual had been spirited away by friends and another misdemeanor went unpunished. Later the police got around this difficulty by arresting the persons, without a warrant, for breach of the peace, and there was little question when the case came up for trial. It has been a mooted point whether police could arrest persons for an intoxication charge they didn't have the necessary papers. The proposed law will settle the question and the bill should go through.

The city of Barre has reclaimed from the dump heap that $250 expenditure—a street sweeper—after allowing the machine to rust all summer when it was most needed on the Main street pavement. Why it should be brought out at this late day is a matter for conjecture with most citizens, but all will rejoice that the machine has not yet passed beyond the period of usefulness.

It is about time for deer in Vermont to take to cover. Next week the slaughter is on.

CURRENT COMMENT.

What the Press of the State and Country Is Talking About.

Fairbanks and a 113-pound pumpkin were photographed in a group at a county fair in the West the other day. The frost on the pumpkin is said to be distinctly visible in the picture.—Chicago Journal.

No one has yet thought to say, but it is obvious just the same that the Wisconsin split has forever ended Senator John C. Spooner's chance of becoming President of the United States. There are now too many Republicans who hate him right at home. He presented a wretched figure of vacillation and weakness.—Springfield Republican.

After girls pass a certain age they begin to consider themselves ineligible. Their friends regard them as old maids. Now, this is a ridiculous notion. Girls ought always to consider themselves young. A woman is young until she is eighty-five. After that she may be regarded as an old maid. A young woman should not allow a young man to call upon her longer than six months. If he does not propose marriage at the end of that time she should dismiss him, or if she fails to do so, her parents should. Too long acquaintance and "keeping company" prejudice the interests of a girl. It gives her friends a chance to talk about her and prejudice her morals.—From a sermon by Fr. Alexis, at St. Joseph's Church, New York.

A look through the cigar case of the average Vermont store will reveal brand after brand of cigars made out of the state. Some are probably a little better, others no better, and very many not so good as those made right here at home. There are few better cigars made than right here in our home towns, and dealers who look to home patronage for their support should push these home-made goods. There is no reason in the world why Vermont's cigar industry should not be quadrupled in the next twelve months if Vermont dealers and smokers look to their own state's interests. Cigarmakers make good wages, are good spenders and are good citizens generally, and there should be several hundred more employed in the state if our people would wake up and properly patronize his home industry. We have in mind a town smaller than Rutland, in which about 20 years ago, a little bunch of perhaps half a dozen cigarmakers were at work. The business men saw the sight, and through their association resolved to handle only such brands of cigars as were made at home; today there are nearly 300 people employed in the cigar industry in that town, there being two good sized factories and several smaller ones.—Vermont Union Signal.

partially on the Ayer street bridge, to be removed before August, 1905.

The offer of the Barre Emergency hospital to put the use of one bed to the use of the city for one year on the payment of $100 was laid on the table.

The committee on charities made a report on the expenditures in the poor department, in which they expressed the opinion that the increased cost of maintenance of the department was only natural and not due to extravagance on the part of the overseer. The motion was accepted and placed on file. It was voted the report be printed in both papers.

It was voted the Eureka Hose Co. be notified that the hose it sold to the city with a three-year guarantee, was leaking after a year's trial, with the purpose of seeing what the company proposed to do about it.

Mrs. G. R. Robertson and daughter, Miss Maywood, and Miss Flora Vincent went to Battleboro this morning to attend the wedding of Mrs. Robertson's son, Harry W. Vincent, which occurs this evening.
